Bad burns lead police to suspect in grad's murder

Kensington. The suspect in Laura Araujo's murder was ID'd after investigators linked him to her car ablaze in S. Philly.

An hour before 23-year-old Laura Araujo's body was found stuffed into a duffel bag off a Kensington alley on Monday morning, the man police say killed her checked himself into the Hospital of University of Pennsylvania with second-degree burns.

Homicide Unit Lt. Walter Bell said that an arson investigator who checked Araujo's 2011 Toyota Rav4, found ablaze in South Philadelphia at 2:20 a.m. on Monday, went to interview Jeremiah Jakson, 22, suspecting a connection to the car.

Jeremiah Jakson, 22 / PPD

After Araujo's body was found at 5:30 a.m., and Jackson was transferred to Crozier-Chester Medical Center, the investigator realized the victim had the same name as the registration of the burning vehicle and contacted detectives, Bell said.

Police said the two were neighbors in Mantua and that Jakson killed Araujo while trying to rob her.

"When I saw her picture, I started screaming," said Araujo's friend and Arts Institute classmate Michael Moore, 21, of learning about her death. "I just lost words. I couldn't believe it was her — such a nice, sweet, innocent, smart girl."

Moore described Araujo, a New York native, as a focused student, devout Christian and natural leader who dreamed of starting her own fashion line one day.

"She was someone I really admired," he said.

Adult bookstore owner sold sex: Officials

A Berlin, New Jersey, adult bookstore employee was charged with promoting prostitution after officials say he, for a fee, was letting people have sex in a back area of the store.

The Camden County Prosecutor's Office said Paul Perkins, 41, of Berlin Township, was also sending out online alerts, letting customers know when a female would be present in that area of Berlin News Agency on Route 73.

The investigation lasted six months. The store was shut down and more than $27,000 was recovered. METRO

Meek Mill defamation suit dropped

Rapper Meek Mill, who is presently in jail for violating probation, will not be facing a defamation suit filed against him by former city cop Andre Boyer.

Mill was sued by Boyer, who stopped Mill's car in 2012 and detained him while searching for drugs. No drugs were found. The rapper then aired his outrage against Boyer on Twitter.

Boyer filed a defamation lawsuit in June against Mill seeking $750,000 in damages, claiming that Mill's criticism "had a strong effect on my life and relationship performance with my fiancée."

North Phila. Divine Lorraine dates set

The Divine Lorraine Hotel is ready to rise.

The dilapidated and neglected historical building at North Broad Street and Fairmount Avenue will finally be restored into a fully functional hotel, officials said.

EB Realty Management Corporation spokesman Chris Cordaro said the group anticipates the project to begin at the end of the summer and finish in 18 months.

The group decided to go through with the project after so many false starts because of timing.

"This neighborhood of North Broad is ready to be redeveloped now," Cordaro said. TOMMY ROWAN

Archeologists with URS clean mud and water from the site of a 3,000- to 5,000-year-old fire pit discovered while doing construction on I-95 in North Philly. / CHARLES MOSTOLLER, METRO

Artifacts from 5,000 years ago on display

Fishtown. As I-95 gets an upgrade, archaeologists are searching for artifacts underneath.

Remnants of Native American civilization carbon-dated to the year 3,350 B.C., found under I-95, will go on display tonight.

"You've got 5,000 years of Philadelphia history here," said Doug Mooney, senior archaeologist with URS, the corporation that designed the I-95 enhancement and is also searching for historic relics before construction begins. "People will see a lot of great artifacts and learn a lot of history about Philly they may not have known before."

The First Presbyterian Church at 418 E. Girard Ave. in Fishtown is hosting the exhibition Thursday from 6-8 p.m.

The finds under I-95 include arrowheads and pieces of ancient pottery from the Delaware tribe.

There are also pieces made at the Dyottsville Glass Works factory, plates, jugs and other housewares of Fishtown and Port Richmond residents of past centuries. Snapping turtle soup was a famous Philadelphia delicacy, and many turtle skulls have been recovered.

Most items were found in former household trash deposits — usually the latrines out back, now treasure troves for archaeologists.

"The folks living here in the 18th and 19th centuries did not have trash pick-up," Mooney said. "A convenient place to put it is the nice deep dank hole in your backyard."

The dig is ongoing, Mooney said.

I-95 is in the midst of a three-mile redesign, from Race Street to Allegheny Avenue, begun in 2008. As work climbs northward, archaeologists will continue sifting dirt for artifacts ahead of construction crews.

Learn your history

Some of these relics were previously displayed at Independence Seaport Museum.

- This exhibit is for one night only.
- There are presently no plans for a permanent installation of the relics and artifacts discovered underneath I-95.

Gun found in baby's diaper bag

A 25-year-old Camden man was arrested Tuesday morning after an employee of his 11-month-old daughter's day care center in Camden found a loaded gun inside her diaper bag.

The gun, which is believed to have been stolen from Philadelphia, was found around 8 a.m. at the El Centro Child Care Center on the 400 block of Martin Luther King Boulevard.

Police arrested and charged Rakeem Williams, a father of two from Lindenwold, New Jersey, with unlawful possession of a weapon, receiving stolen property, among others.

The gun was apparently loaded with hollow-point bullets. Williams is being held at the county jail. METRO

Manayunk. High line project green-lighted

The Conshohocken Running Club is ready to reach new territory come 2015.

Ryan Conway, who founded the club, typically takes his flock to the Manayunk line and turns around. But after the Manayunk Bridge turns into a high line, he can "cross over the Schuylkill."

"We'll definitely be out that way," he said.

Construction on the Manayunk Bridge Trail Project got the green light from the city this week. A formal groundbreaking will be held in September, and the $4.12 million project is expected to be ready by fall 2015.

The plans call for the Cynwyd Heritage Trail to connect to the Schuylkill River Trail via the Manayunk Bridge. It will be part of a biking and walking trail that will lead to Main Street.

Nicholas Mirra, spokesman for the Bicycle Coalition of Greater Philadelphia, said the city is "slowly but surely becoming a better city for biking every year."

■ PENNSYLVANIA RESIDENTS LINE UP: Bags of cash are being released and Pennsylvania residents are being urged to call this number: 1-866-218-6698. That's because for the next 3 days, thousands of Vault Bags loaded with real U.S. Gov't issued money are actually being released to Pennsylvania residents who live in the counties listed below. But don't thank the U.S. Gov't. The Vault Bags are being loaded with rarely seen U.S. collectible currency and released from the vaults of the private World Reserve Monetary Exchange and the only thing county residents need to do to get the money is immediately call the Distribution Hotline for Pennsylvania residents and cover just the $99 Vault Bag fee within the next 3 days.

Bags of cash go to residents in 64 PA counties

Bags loaded with real U.S. Gov't issued money are set for public release as thousands of U.S. residents stand to miss the deadline to get the money; now any resident of Pennsylvania living in a county listed below can get the bags of money for themselves and keep all the rarely seen U.S. collectible currency found inside by covering the $99 Vault Bag fee within the next 3 days

Beaver	Clearfield	Fulton	Mercer	Westmoreland
Bedford	Clinton	Greene	Mifflin
Blair	Crawford	Huntingdon	Potter
Butler	Elk	Indiana	Somerset
Cambria	Erie	Jefferson	Venango

▶ How to get the money: If you live in one of the Pennsylvania counties listed above immediately call this number: 1-866-218-6698. Residents of Pennsylvania will be permitted to get up to 10 Vault Bags of money beginning at precisely 8:30am this morning.

PENNSYLVANIA - Pennsylvania residents who find their county on the Distribution List today will be running to their phones.

That's because Vault Bags loaded with rarely seen and collectible U.S. Gov't issued money are actually being released by the World Reserve to Pennsylvania residents who beat the 3-day deadline.

The only thing residents need to do is look for their county on the Distribution List printed in today's publication. If their county is on the list, they need to immediately call the Distribution Hotline for Pennsylvania residents before the 3-day deadline ends to cover just the $99 Vault Bag fee and shipping-handling to get the money.

"You can actually spend it. It's real money. But anyone would be an absolute fool to spend these bills because the collection is already worth more than it's face value", said Timothy J. Shissler, Director of Vault Operations for the private World Reserve.

"That's why smart collectors would never dream of cashing in one of these rarely seen Gov't issued bills. In fact, they're adding all the Vault Bags they can get to their collections and hanging on to them because there's no telling how much just one of these rarely seen bills could be worth someday," said Shissler.

"And since there's still

money to be released this announcement is being widely advertised all across the country. That's why we're allowing any resident of Pennsylvania who lives in one of the 64 approved counties to get the money," said Shissler.

"Each valuable bag of money is sealed with a red Security Seal. This guarantees that the money in each Vault Bag has not been tampered with when it arrives," Shissler said.

"In fact, each Vault Bag is loaded with 8 stunning estate wallets custom made to hold, secure, protect and display all 11 of the highly collectible U.S. Gov't issued notes pictured to the right with the red stars: including one valuable uncut sheet of four $2 Gov't issued notes, three valuable never circulated U.S. Gov't issued $2 notes, one rarely seen red seal $2 note and three highly sought after $1 blue seal silver certificate notes. With all these estate wallets that protect the valuable U.S. currency filling up each Vault Bag, any resident who gets one will be glad they did," said Shissler.

"Although there are never any guarantees, there's no telling what these Vault Bags could be worth some day because they contain current uncut, old and rarely seen U.S. currency. That's why at just $99 per bag Pennsylvania residents are sure to be getting as many bags of money they can get their hands on," Shissler said.

And here's the best part. Residents who get the big green Vault Locker pictured below loaded with 10 Vault Bags of U.S. Gov't issued money will immediately have their Vault Bag fee reduced to just $89 per bag, which is a real deal since each Vault Locker is loaded with 110 U.S. Gov't issued collectible notes pictured to the right with the red stars.

"With all this money being released we're bracing for all the calls and doing our best to make sure Pennsylvania residents get through. But, it is important that residents find their county on the Distribution List and call the Distribution Hotline for Pennsylvania residents right away to beat the deadline. Because residents who miss the deadline will be turned away from this offer for U.S. Gov't issued currency and forced to wait for future announcements in this publication or others, if any," Shissler said.

"We know the hotlines will be ringing off the hook because we're allowing residents to get up to 10 Vault Bags of money. But to make sure residents of all 64 counties on the Distribution List have a fair chance to get the money, we'll be strictly enforcing the 10 bag limit," he said.

Thousands of residents are expected to call to get the bags of money.

So, Pennsylvania residents who find their county listed in today's publication need to immediately call the Distribution Hotline for Pennsylvania residents before the 3-day deadline ends to get the money. So if lines are busy keep trying, all calls will be answered. ■

The Distribution Hotlines open at precisely 8:30am this morning for Pennsylvania residents who find their county on the Distribution List at 1-866-218-6698.

This release is authorized for Vault Bags containing U.S. Gov't issued money by the World Reserve Monetary Exchange. Each Vault Bag is loaded with rarely seen U.S. collectible currency and will only be released to Pennsylvania residents who live in one of the counties listed in today's publication and beat the 3-day order deadline to cover just the $99 Vault Bag fee and shipping-handling for each bag of money. Each Vault Bag contains all 11 of the U.S. Gov't issued notes pictured below with a red star: including one valuable uncut sheet of four $2 Gov't issued notes, three valuable never circulated U.S. Gov't issued $2 notes, one rarely seen red seal $2 note and three $1 blue seal silver certificate notes. The valuable bags of money are being released for the next 3 days. Any vault bags that go unclaimed may be re-allocated by the World Reserve to be sent out. Therefore, this same offer may be made at a later date or in a different geographic location. So, if lines are busy keep trying, all calls will be answered.

▶ All 11 U.S. Gov't issued notes with red stars are in each Vault Bag

But only residents who beat the deadline are getting every single U.S. note shown below by covering the additional claim fee within the next 3 days

■ REAL GOV'T ISSUED MONEY: Each Vault Bag is filled up with money in estate wallets that protect the uncut, old and rarely seen U.S. Gov't issued currency.

■ UNBROKEN SEAL: The security seal ensures that the bags have never been tampered with after the U.S. currency is loaded at the World Reserve.

Safety. Bill would punish executives who conceal product info

Two U.S. senators on Wednesday unveiled a bill prompted by the General Motors Co. recalls over defective ignition switches that would make it a crime for corporate officers to conceal dangers posed by their products.

Democratic senators Richard Blumenthal of Connecticut and Bob Casey of Pennsylvania said their proposal calls for up to five years in prison and fines for corporate officers who know their products could cause death or injury to consumers or workers and hide that information.

"Corporate concealment can kill, and corporate officers who engage in concealment must be held accountable," Blumenthal said. REUTERS

Apple agrees to pay $450 million e-book price antitrust accord

Apple Inc. has agreed to pay $450 million to resolve U.S. state and consumer claims the iPad manufacturer conspired with five major publishers to fix e-book prices, according to court records filed Wednesday.

The settlement, which would provide $400 million for consumers, is conditioned on the outcome of a pending appeal of a New York federal judge's ruling last year that Apple was liable for violating antitrust laws.

A ruling by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York reversing the judge could, under the settlement, either reduce the amount Apple pays to $70 million, with $50 million for consumers, or eliminate payments altogether.

"While we cannot predict the outcome of the appeal with certainty, we are confident in the case we made against Apple at trial," Connecticut Attorney General George Jepsen said in a statement.

The settlement, which requires approval of U.S. District Judge Denise Cote, had been announced in June. Terms were not disclosed at the time.

It came ahead of an Aug. 25 damages trial, in which attorneys general in 33 states and territories and lawyers for a class of consumers were expected to seek up to $840 million. REUTERS

Time Warner rebuffs Fox bid

Rupert Murdoch's 21st Century Fox said on Wednesday that Time Warner had rebuffed its offer to buy the company, but people familiar with his thinking say he is determined to bring the U.S. media conglomerate into his empire.

Time Warner's stock rose 16.9 percent to $82.99 on the New York Stock Exchange after news that Murdoch had his sights on Time Warner, the owner of media properties including the Warner Bros. movie studio and cable channels such as HBO and CNN.

Shares of Fox, which owns a broadcast network and the Fox News cable news channel as well as movie studio 20th Century Fox, were down 4.7 percent at $33.52.

Lawmakers press CDC over unsafe lapses

The CDC is under scrutiny for the potential exposure of up to 80 workers to live anthrax in June. No one has fallen sick due to the lapses. / GETTY IMAGES

Washington, D.C.
The CDC will close the two labs that released pathogens.

U.S. lawmakers on Wednesday faulted a "dangerous pattern" of safety lapses at government laboratories handling deadly pathogens such as anthrax and avian flu, calling for an overhaul of controls at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Members of a House Energy and Commerce Committee subcommittee cited new information on breaches previously unreported by CDC.

The criticism, equally shared by Democratic and Republican lawmakers, was directed at CDC Director Dr. Thomas Frieden at a hearing. The incidents at the CDC's Atlanta campus have sparked fresh concerns over the lack of independent oversight of potentially dangerous research nationwide, even as the number of labs doing such work has surged in recent years.

Frieden was pressed for answers on why the government's most respected laboratories were not prepared to report or prevent dozens of breaches identified by federal investigators, and whether its staff recognized the huge risk to the public if dangerous microbes were to escape its labs.

"A dangerous, very dangerous pattern is emerging and there are a lot of unknowns out there. ... Why do these events keep happening?"

HIV

AIDS epidemic can be controlled by 2030, UN says

New HIV infections and deaths from AIDS are decreasing, the United Nations said on Wednesday, making it possible to control the epidemic by 2030 and eventually end it "in every region, in every country."

"More than ever before, there is hope that ending AIDS is possible. However, a business-as-usual approach or simply sustaining the AIDS response at its current pace cannot end the epidemic," the U.N. AIDS program UNAIDS said in a global report issued ahead of an AIDS conference in Melbourne, Australia, next week.

Typhoon kills 10 in the Philippines

Philippines. Manila Electric Company said 76 percent of the area it serves was without power.

A typhoon killed at least 10 people as it churned across the Philippines and shut down the capital, cutting power and prompting the evacuation of more than 400,000 residents, rescue officials said.

The eye of Typhoon Rammasun, the strongest storm to hit the country this year, passed south of Manila after cutting a path across the main island of Luzon, toppling trees and power lines and causing electrocutions and widespread blackouts.

By Wednesday evening, the storm was easing in the capital, and markets and public offices were due to reopen on Thursday. Some schools were to remain closed.

Residents

460K

Officials said 460,000 people had been affected by the storm.

"Our weather is improving as the typhoon is moving further away," Rene Paciente of the weather bureau said, adding that storm alerts in various parts of the country were lifted or lowered.

The number of evacuated residents had reached 409,000, Wilma Cabrera, the Social Welfare Assistant Secretary, told Reuters.

Many of those forced from their homes were in the eastern province of Albay, the first to be hit by the typhoon, the disaster agency said. They were taken to schools, gymnasiums and town halls for shelter. REUTERS

Israeli shelling killed four boys on a Gaza beach on Wednesday, a local health official said, and Palestinian militants fired more than 100 rockets into Israel after a failed Egyptian attempt to halt more than a week of warfare.

Israel later on Wednesday agreed to a proposed six-hour cessation of hostilities for humanitarian reasons, a senior Israeli official said, adding that it had not yet been decided when the lull would take place. REUTERS

Swedish court upholds arrest warrant for Assange

A Swedish court upheld on Wednesday an arrest warrant for WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange, who has spent two years at Ecuador's London embassy to avoid extradition to Sweden over allegations of sexual assault.

Swedish prosecutors want to question Assange over the allegations made by two female former WikiLeaks volunteers.

Assange denies the allegations and has been fighting a legal battle against extradition since his arrest in Britain in December 2010. REUTERS

Japanese artist jailed for vagina boat outraged, vows legal fight

A Japanese artist who made figures of Lady Gaga and a kayak modeled on her vagina said on Wednesday from jail she was "outraged" by her arrest and vowed a court fight against obscenity charges.

Megumi Igarashi, 42, says she was challenging a culture of "discrimination" against discussion of the vagina in Japanese society.

Igarashi, who worked under the alias Rokude-nashiko, which means "good-for-nothing girl" in Japanese, built a yellow kayak with a top shaped like her vagina after raising about $10,000 through crowdfunding.

Igarashi sent 3-D printer data of her scanned vagina — the digital basis for her kayak project — as a thanks to a number of donors.

Igarashi said about 10 police officers had arrived at her house on Saturday and initially, she thought they were only interested in confiscating work she has said is meant as a pop-art exploration of the "manko," vulgar Japanese slang for vagina.

"I couldn't stop myself from laughing a little as I explained to the grim-looking officers, 'This is the Lady Gaga manko figure,'" Igarashi told Reuters from across a plastic security divide in a central Tokyo jail. REUTERS

OMG! Stick-on knobs turn your tablet into a DJ mix workstation

Watch out, David Guetta: these stick-on knobs will turn any tablet-toting person into a bona fide DJ. Tuna Knobs are suction-cup dials that can attach to a touchscreen and control your tablet like a DJ workstation. Dutch creator Samuel Verburg came up with the idea while interning at the Rotterdam-based design company Tweetonig. "We loved Tuna and worked for about four months to make a real product, ready for mass production," explains John Tillema, product developer at Tweetonig. Compatible with iOS, Android or Windows devices, the prices of Tuna Knobs vary from $12 for a single knob to $115 for a set of 10 when they're out before Christmas. Metro spoke with Tillema to find out more.

Hours

Our Kickstarter funding for the project reached its goal in 21 hours, so we are definitely making the knobs and shipping them out before the Christmas holiday season. What happens after that is still a mystery.

How did the idea of Tuna Knobs come about?

While playing with all those DJ and MIDI controller apps on the iPad, Samuel missed the feeling of his "old" controllers — that nice feeling of how a small twist would really control the music, even with your eyes closed. And so, the idea of a knob for digital touchscreen devices was born. He came to us at Tweetonig and we started working together.

What's the appeal?

Well, the best part is that it can be used on any mobile device. People will be using it on top of their favorite apps. You can best compare it with a stylus for drawing or writing. You could do it with your fingers, but it is unprecise. The main advantage is getting tactile feedback on a tablet.

Who wants to play with Tuna knobs?

The knobs are for every DJ, producer, VJ or any other composer.

Fight nature with nature

Mosquitoes.
Keep bugs away without chemicals.

They're a bummer on an otherwise perfect summer day. But mosquito bites can also carry diseases, including the West Nile virus, which was just detected in New York City this week. With 170 mosquito species in North America alone, you should be slathering on repellent before your night out like you apply sunscreen in the morning. But not all repellents are created equal. Look for ones that contain the least amount of DEET, a common active ingredient that should be washed off after you return home. Try one of these affordable natural products made with essential oils:

ZAHRA AHMED
@metroPhilly
letters@metro.us

1 Burt's Bees

A blend of natural essential oils — rosemary, lemongrass, citronella — not only wards off bugs but has a fresh herbal scent. Burt's Bees All Natural Outdoor Herbal Insect Repellent, $10, Walgreens

2 Avon

Available as a lotion or spray, this line does double duty as a sunscreen and bug repellent. It's also DEET-free! Avon Skin So Soft Bug Guard, $6-$20, shop.avon.com

3 California Baby

California Baby's products are gentle and safe enough for children. This repellent soothes existing bites while warding off new ones. California Baby Natural Bug Blend Bug Repellent, $15.49 at CaliforniaBaby.com

4 EcoSmart

Free of DEET and other synthetic chemicals, this keeps bugs away for hours with organic plant oils such as cinnamon. EcoSmart Organic Insect Repellent, $7, EcoSmart.com

5 Erbaviva

Ever considered catnip as a bug repellent? Erbaviva captured catnip oil (it belongs to the mint family) in its purest form and mixed it with lemon, eucalyptus, cedarwood, citronella and lemongrass oils for a citrusy and woodsy scent. Erbaviva Organic Buzz Spray, $21, Erbaviva.com

Sais, who is CEO of the Non-Verbal Game, says it's possible for you to hit on anyone, anywhere, as long as you follow these tips:

1 Grin and bear it: Sais says the first step to flirting with a stranger is to make eye contact and smile. If they're reading a book or looking at their phone, walk over and say hello.

2 Count: Watch how long the other person holds eye contact: You're golden if it lasts for two seconds.

3 Approach naturally: "Don't use lines," says Sais. Instead, he suggests walking up to your crush and simply saying hello. "If you're shy, you can use that as your strength," he says. "'Hey, I really don't do this a lot and I'm kind of shy, but I had to approach you and get your number,' – that's a natural way for success."

ANDREA D. PARK

Guinea pig. A single newspaper man reluctantly agreed to meet with a romantic advisor to help him date in real life, not just online.

I'm at a Manhattan former-speakeasy on a modest weekday night getting schooled by Jared Sais, a professional dating coach. Sais is teaching me in the ways of what was once a very common — and to some, like me, cripplingly terrifying — social convention: trying to pick up complete strangers in public places rather than do so online.

The Internet allegedly made this much easier. Various apps (Tinder, Grindr, whatever you like) break the ice for us. If we don't go that route, we can simply woo people with our online personalities, which may be funnier, smarter, more charming and less prone to unsightly nervous tics than our vastly disappointing in-person selves. But that doesn't always work. And so I'm trying it old school, just for a lark.

From birth to age 4, Sais was deaf, and only gained his hearing after some miraculous experiments. This period gave him an unusually strong gift for reading body language. He decided he'd use this skill for a noble cause: He goes out with people who require romantic advising and steers them through the thing that probably frightens them more than dying.

But he's no mere Hitch, the "date doctor" once essayed on film by Will Smith. And he's not about sex. He boasts, with a huge grin, that three of his clients have gotten married this year. There's an inevitable dude-ness to some of his techniques, but they can all — or at least most — be applied to any gender or sexual preference.

Also, stick with two drinks, tops. This seems wise.

So here we go.

ATEMPT ONE

One of the first girls I'm instructed to hit on ignores me completely. That's not true: She glances up, just enough to let out a knowing I'm-being-hit-on chuckle, then returns to her friends.

LESSON

This is not the end of the world. I've been advised to develop a "f— it" attitude. The same impulse that should get me to approach complete strangers in bars is the same one that has me rebounding when I've been unceremoniously shot down. So I walk back to where I was and don't let it get me down.

ATEMPT TWO

I go up to a girl sitting with a friend at a bar. We talk about the ginger cocktail she's nursing. I leave, but later return. We already have a rapport based on the drink. Before she leaves I fumble a last second chat.

LESSON

Sais preaches the power of "little jabs." You don't run up to a potential mark and instantly perish with an unfortunate line. You exchange glances. Then you make initial, friendly contact. Maybe around the third or fourth meeting, you try for something a little more serious — but not that serious. A number works.

ATEMPT THREE

Sais and I start talking to two girls and a guy sitting near us. We just chit-chat and we quickly suss out that all three are married, two to each other. No bother: We keep on talking, just for fun.

LESSON

This shouldn't be just about getting numbers. It should be about meeting people, learning about them, sharing a few laughs. It pushes whatever romantic motives you may have to the back of the mind, therefore making it easier to find someone you may actually like. Loosened up, you may actually make a real connection.

ATEMPT FOUR

For most of the night, there's been a group of girls behind us. They get up to leave, but Sais flags them down. The next thing I know, he's a few feet away and I'm speaking to three French girls.

LESSON

Sais often compares humans to animals, and he talks about how hyenas often break up into packs. This makes conversation easier. And it should be about conversation: As I speak, the words are just flowing out of me. I'm not trying to hit on them or even get their numbers, even if that's in the back of my mind.

The realization

L'AMOUR!

Luckily, one of the French girls addresses the elephant in the room (because they're not American, or at least not me): "Why didn't you come over earlier?" she asks. Without getting nervous, I make a lightly self-deprecating joke about slow Americans. They like this and we continue chatting. Eventually they do leave, as intended, and I realize too late that I could have gotten their numbers but am OK that I didn't. And then I realize I have no idea who I am anymore.

Why it's harder than ever to find satisfaction in marriage

For exclusive commentary, visit Metro.us/blogs.

The new television series "Satisfaction" on USA is taking a bold stance on marriage, monogamy and infidelity by calling out these critical issues. A successful couple with a teenage daughter has silently entered the doldrums of their marriage. As so often happens, they don't talk about it. Instead, they each look externally for a sense of satisfaction.

The show got me thinking about monogamy and marriage and also raised an important question: What if the having it all outside isn't enough to feel fulfilled inside?

Dissatisfaction drives satisfaction

In a marriage where a couple is drifting apart, it's all but preordained that any couple will stray physically and emotionally.

It happens silently

Over time, life can enter a place of habit for many couples, and that's when things can get dreary.

I recently polled just over 1,000 women – more than two-thirds of whom are in long-term relationships – and asked a very straightforward question: What do women want in bed? In analyzing the responses, a whopping 92 percent answered that the most important thing – ranked higher than foreplay and oral sex – is a kiss. Not just any kiss – a real kiss filled with passion.

Here, we can see what so many women are missing – passion and desire. They don't want to leave their marriages, but they aren't willing to put their wants and needs on hold either.

A recipe for disconnection

Long-term relationships suffer from one main issue: predictability. Comfort and routine can make people forget why they fell in love.

The solution is showing gratitude. The bottom line: No matter how much someone loves you, everyone has a breaking point. And that's when you'll find they've fallen into the arms of someone else.

The Bearded Ladies take on Andy Warhol

Onstage. Opera and cabaret collide in "Andy: A Popera."

"Andy: A Popera" is at the Wilma Theater (265 S. Broad St.) through July 27. Go to www.wilmatheater.org or www.beardedladiescabaret.com. / KATE RAINES, PLATE 3 PHOTOGRAPHY

If you want to discover the difference between opera and cabaret, take a look at their audiences. An opera crowd will dress in their finest, sitting silently and respectfully; a cabaretgoer will likely do neither. But when "Andy: A Popera" debuts next March, those two worlds will collide via an Andy Warhol-themed collaboration between experimental cabaret troupe the Bearded Ladies and Opera Philadelphia.

Bearded Ladies artistic director John Jarboe hopes that he can carry a bit of cabaret raucousness with him onto the bigger stage. "What we're trying to do in the Bearded Ladies is make live experiences that remind you that they're live," he says. "In cabaret, the audience needs to feel like they can respond and that their presence in the room can affect the show. When I'm in a normal play I won't respond if an audience member coughs or says something, but in cabaret, that's gold."

Over the next two weeks, the Bearded Ladies will appear in a more familiar context, as they present an hour-long cabaret piece in the lobby of the Wilma Theater. The show is stage two of the company's yearlong exploration of Warhol, which will culminate in the "popera" next year, presented as part of Opera Philadelphia's Opera in the City series. Stage one began with a performance at the Philadelphia Museum of Art in May and continued with a series of pop-up performances in nontraditional spaces such as grocery stores and public parks.

Pop-up performance

"Going into a Whole Foods dressed as a Campbell's Soup can and trying to buy yourself was really delightful. We also had Marilyn Monroe buying kale."

Jarboe

Time capsule

Campbell's Soup

The idea of paying homage to Warhol was a natural one for the Beards, Jarboe says, because "he feels like a cabaret artist of the visual arts in terms of how he appropriates known quantities and uses them in new ways." The cabaret piece will feature a Warhol expert named Dr. Peter Never giving a lecture as he opens one of Warhol's famous "time capsules" — boxes of random items and mementoes that he accumulated during his lifetime.

"We started with a very simple question, which is 'Why is Andy so big?'" Jarboe explains. "Is it through repetition? Is it through associating yourself with big things that already exist, like Coke bottles and Campbell's Soup cans? So each object in the box corresponds to a musical number or a character who comes forward that has some kind of lesson or nonlesson to offer Dr. Never about Warhol's bigness."

4 Ways 'The Purge: Anarchy' is smart

The second "Purge" features a whole new line of scary masks. / UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Satirical thriller. The sequel to last year's surprise hit didn't have to try, but it did anyway.

1 It has a real message. The titular event in "The Purge" movies refers to an annual tradition in a near-future America in which all crimes, notably murder, are legal for 12 hours. The idea is that the populace gets the worst instincts out of their system once a year. Sure enough, crime rates have gone down. But this claim might actually be bull. As suggested in the first and shown in the second, the ones being killed tend to be homeless or underprivileged.

2 It goes deeper. Where "The Purge" took place in suburbia, "Anarchy" heads to the city, where we see how the most vulnerable — i.e., the most poor — struggle through the holiday to survive. Our heroes are a motley crew thrown together by circumstance, forced to work together to survive the streets. They include a waitress (Carmen Ejogo) and her daughter (Zoe Soul), a young couple (Kiele Sanchez and Zach Gilford) whose car broke down and an armed-to-the-teeth (but not really scary) stranger (Frank Grillo) who actually intends to use the day to avenge his murdered son. We see more of how the extremely wealthy spend the day, not just hiding behind expensive gates but buying people to kill for fun. The whole cast is new, including a revolutionary (Michael K. Williams) who spreads dissent about the Purge, aiming to take down the right-wing government that implemented it.

3 It's a decent genre film. "The Purge" was a home invasion picture. This is a survive-the-streets thriller — like "The Warriors," "Judgment Night" or "After Hours" — and it's a not bad one. Our heroes are stuck on streets swarming with homicidal maniacs and gangs of masked monsters, and only one has any skill with a gun. There are booby traps and all different kinds of villains. Although he's not necessarily the most inventive horror auteur, returning writer-director James DeMonaco is skilled at continually raising the bar.

4 It at least attempts to appease both sides. Shockingly, the first "Purge" went all the way with its critique of blood lust, even denying viewers the chance to see all the baddies gorily vanquished. This one indulges that desire a little bit more. Grillo's hopeful-avenger is handy with dispatching baddies, and there's even a scene where we're fully nudged to cheer as our heroes turn the tables on a legion of would-be assassins. Ejogo and Soul's characters are on-hand as the resident killjoy pacifists, forever begging Grillo to not give in to vengeance. But "Anarchy" only sides with that pair to a point, giving into presupposed audience demands at the expense of a more nuanced message.

Jason Segel and Cameron Diaz get ready to have some not-very-R-rated coitus in "Sex Tape." / CLAIRE FOLGER

Parental comedy. 'Sex Tape' fails to launch

Review

'Sex Tape'

Director: Jake Kasdan

Stars: Cameron Diaz, Jason Segel

Rating: R

In "Sex Tape," Cameron Diaz and Jason Segel play parents who have so little time for sex that they've basically forgotten how to do it. After attempting to spice things up by recording themselves at play, they freak out when the subsequent video is accidentally beamed to other people's iPads — friends, family, co-workers, et al.

There's a sadness to comedies like this (think 2010's "Date Night") — not just because of how lazy they are, but in the subject matter as well. These are films about the ruins of aging, lost youth, withering sex drives and unwanted maturity. They're not even funny — they just strand good actors in forced situations that could have been better handled by more skilled filmmakers.

Even for a thin farce, "Sex Tape" doesn't have much meat on it. A large chunk of the film is eaten up by a visit to Diaz's new boss (Rob Lowe). The sequence inelegantly piles on not-very-shocking shock tactics.

Diaz and Segel both give it a good go, but they don't have much chemistry together, nor do they have time to properly explore the anxieties that fuel the material. If "Sex Tape" were smarter, it would realize that pain is a good motivator for inventive comedy.

Back in action. Zach Braff's latest will make fans and haters different kinds of crazy.

In "Wish I Was Here," Zach Braff's daughter (Joey King) has a pink wig. / MERIE WEISMILLER WALLACE, SMPSP

It took him 10 years and an overexposed Kickstarter campaign, but Zach Braff finally wrote, directed and starred in a follow-up to "Garden State." He again plays a struggling actor looking for happiness, but this time he's married (to Kate Hudson) and his dad (Mandy Patinkin) is dying.

The downside

"Garden State" has legions of ardent fans — but it has as many detractors. The haters berated its mega-quirkiness and over-earnestness, as well as the way Braff, in the lead, ended every sentence with a question mark. (It was profoundly annoying?) Although the movie was genuinely amusing, it was often ruined by bad gags and cloying sentiment.

The same thing happens in "Wish I Was Here." But this movie also suffers from sophomore syndrome, which often occurs when an artist feels burdened by the work they're putting out following a hit debut: It's over-packed yet under-organized; it's both arrogant and sincere in its ambition. Braff can't settle on a main storyline, so he fumbles with many, including one about badly home-schooled kids (that he luckily winds up forgetting about). As in "Garden State," the tone veers drunkenly between gags — some amusing, others chokingly whimsical — and unsightly corniness, marked by Braff's expected soundtrack of sad-yet-inspiring songs he just can't wait for you to hear.

The upside

The thread detailing Patinkin dying is actually genuinely moving, and not because of the wishy-washy faith talk that finds Braff's character, a religious skeptic, chatting with rabbis. It's because of the hard line it takes on death. Patinkin plays a proud man buried under an endless beard who calmly rattles off withering appraisals of his son's poor life choices. But as his voice weakens, you sense a man afraid of having lived a poor life himself and hoping only to leave it on a high note. These scenes, usually (but not always) underplayed, stare death in the face; they don't get tied up in vague religious chatter, they just confront life's disappointments head-on. It's too bad the rest of the film doesn't live up to these moments.

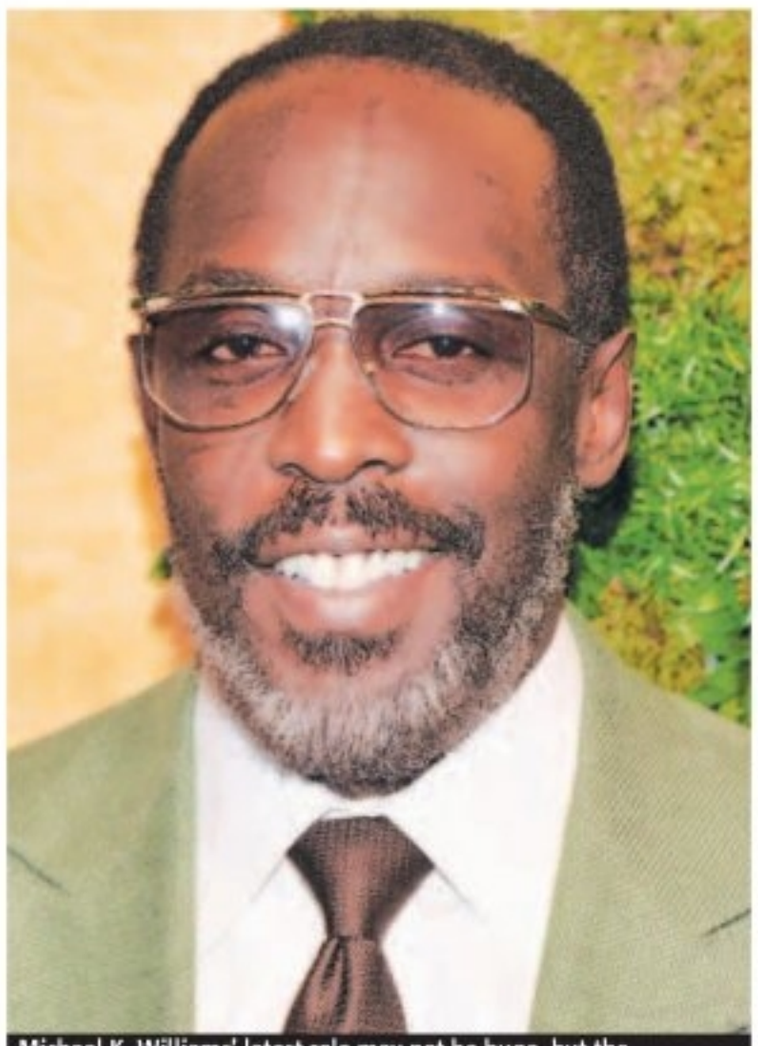
Omar Little lives!



Michael K. Williams' latest role may not be huge, but the message his character has is pretty timely. / GETTY IMAGES

Tough talk. Michael K. Williams says he really admired his revolutionary in "The Purge: Anarchy."

Michael K. Williams is best known as Omar Little, the charismatic gang-preying hood in "The Wire." But he's never been one to be boxed in. In addition to appearances in "RoboCop," "Kill the Messenger" and "Inherent Vice," the actor has a small but key role in "The Purge: Anarchy," in which he plays a revolutionary trying to spread awareness of the real meaning behind the annual holiday: that most of the people being killed are the poor and downtrodden. This, he says, isn't too far from reality.

Your character gets to be the voice of reason.
He's a mixture of Malcolm X, Huey Newton and Tupac Shakur. He's smart, he's outspoken, he's brave, he's honest. He spoke to me in a lot of ways. I felt like one of the people he was talking to, that he was informing me about what's really going on in the world. He speaks to the downtrodden, the have-nots, the people who don't have a voice, who feel like they've been forgotten by society. His words and writing drew me to the project.

Did the first 'Purge' — which is a critique of blood lust in the moneyed suburbs — speak to you as well?
I loved part one, but there was an elephant in the room that it did not address but that part two does — that all the poor people were the ones being purged. Or if they weren't being purged, they were being forced to murder just to survive. They don't have the luxury of state-of-the-art security systems to gate themselves in their mansions.

How do you think this film speaks to low-income urban communities?
We're living in a sort of "Purge," with ... the economic divide, the haves and have-nots and the middle class being eradicated. People aren't surviving. ... They can't feed their families; they're eating cat food for dinner. It's like a slow-motion "Purge" happening right now.

Harsh times

Farewell to arms

This film also speaks to America's unhealthy gun culture.
There have been 74 school shootings since Sandy Hook. I'm not talking about all the other crap that goes on in the streets. There have been 74 school shootings since Sandy Hook. We got a problem.

All President Obama was saying is: Get a background check. He's not trying to take anybody's guns. He was saying if you're on record as having mental illness or if you have a violent past, it shouldn't be that easy to just buy a gun — especially if you're both.

This film is definitely talking about the level of violence we are obsessed with. It's funny when people get 12 hours to purge and guns are the first thing they turn to. How far away we are from that in reality is the question.

Dirty Heads make for a 'Sweet Summer'

Hot tickets.
Southern California's finest are riding a new wave on "Sound of Change."

CHRIS CARPENTER
@MetroPHILLY
letters@metro.us

With August fast approaching, SoCal rockers Dirty Heads express their bittersweet qualms with the fleeting nature of summer on "My Sweet Summer," the lead track from their fourth studio album, "Sound of Change."

"I was doing a writing exercise where I was writing songs for other people and sending them out. Kenny Chesney and I were shooting emails back and forth, so I had started this country-ish, reggae-ish song," Jared "Dirty J" Watson, lead singer of Dirty Heads, says about the early inception of "Summer."

Inspired by the escape of summer — both literally and figuratively — Watson crafted the song around the departure of a summer romance.

"When the idea of 'my sweet summer is gone' came and we [the band] nailed down the idea and the gist of the story that we wanted to tell, it was just about painting a cool picture. We knew that we had something special," says Watson.

Dirty Heads' most successful song to date came in 2010 with the acoustic surf tune "Lay Me Down." The song reached No. 1 on both Billboard's Alternative chart and Rock chart.

"[Surf culture] tied into our music very heavily in the beginning. Now that we're grown men and have been doing this for 10 years and have seen the world, I think that this band is a lot more international and worldly," says Watson. "I think our new album is a little broader. It's so heavy on that reggae-rock vibe. It's something new."

Long past their days of crawling the country in a van, the band are currently on tour with Pepper and are playing select dates with 311.

"Touring in a van and not making any money for seven years made us who we were," says Watson. "We didn't care; it was all about the music. We knew it was going to pay off."

A little bit country

Kenny Chesney gets Dirty

Kenny Chesney — arguably country music's reigning king right now — is a self-proclaimed super-fan of Dirty Heads.

"I think country music is great; it's hilarious. I love the storytelling aspect," Watson says. "For somebody like Kenny Chesney to have touched so many people and have so many fans — obviously he's doing something amazing. For him to play our music before his shows, that's just really cool. It's crazy. That whole 'barefoot, sand, Coronas' vibe that he brings is like the country version of us. He's a very cool dude."

COMEDY

'Welcome to Sweden'

Amy Poehler's little bro gets a TV show all his own — and it's actually pretty funny. The whole thing takes place in Sweden, so we're hoping for the Swedish Ron Swanson to appear. 9 P.M., NBC

Amy and Greg Poehler are not actually twins. They just look like they could be. / BENJAMIN THURESSON, NBC

COMEDY

'Married'

Professional scene-stealers Nat Faxon and Judy Greer get a starring vehicle of their own in this dark comedy about navigating married life. SERIES PREMIERE, 10 P.M., FX

COMEDY

'The Late Show with David Letterman'

Colin Firth appears, presumably to talk about his new movie, "Magic in the Moonlight," a film in which Emma Stone plays his love interest. Fun fact: Amanda Bynes, who is two years older than Stone, once played his daughter. Hollywood! 11:35 P.M., CBS

DRAMA

'Rush'

Not to be confused with the car racing movie, USA's latest dramedy is about a doctor who sees patients who would prefer not to go to an actual hospital, because they are a bunch of shady types who need to keep their health issues secret. SERIES PREMIERE, 9 P.M., USA

"Reckless" airs Sunday nights at 10 p.m. on CBS. /FRED NORRIS, CBS

One bad cop

Interview. Shawn Hatosy goes from "Southland" hero to "Reckless" villain.

Shawn Hatosy spent five seasons trying really, really hard to be a good cop on "Southland," so now that he has the chance to go a bit darker as a more crooked officer of the law on the new series "Reckless," he's making sure to enjoy it. The series' debut season revolves around his character, Det. Terry McCandless, being sued for sexual harassment after an incident that takes place in the first episode.

Just how quickly Hatosy had to switch from one character to the other may surprise some viewers: "He was in a shot in the last episode of 'Southland' until 10 at night, got on the plane, came to the set of 'Reckless' in Charleston, did not go to sleep or anything, went to his trailer and put on his suit," series creator Dana Stevens says. "That's a big turnaround." Here, Hatosy lets us in on how that's working out for him.

He's been doing a lot of research into playing a bad guy: "[From] all the research I did on villains — and I did a lot — what I learned is that bad guys start behaving nefariously because in some way love screwed them over," he says. "Darth Vader — here is a decent guy who ultimately went to the dark side because Natalie Portman hurt him. Now Wylie Coyote, this was a coyote with good intentions, and the Road Runner comes along and he's addicted to the chase, something he can't obtain, and that made him be impossible to be around. Bill O'Reilly — here is a guy that's so in love with himself and the sound of his own voice that he's become the personification of evil."

He expects real-life cops to stop treating him so nicely: "I played a cop on a show where he's a beloved character in Los Angeles," Hatosy explains about his "Southland" legacy. "One day I was standing on the side of La Brea and Wilshire on my skateboard, and I looked over and there was a police officer in a car who looked at me and he said, 'Sammy' — which was the name of the character I played — 'Cops don't ride skateboards.' ... After they watch 'Reckless,' I have a feeling that same cop would probably look at me and throw me in handcuffs and maybe spit on me."

Quoted

"[From] all the research I did on villains — and I did a lot — what I learned is that bad guys start behaving nefariously because in some way love screwed them over." Hatosy

About the show

"Reckless" has something for everyone: "The show satisfies viewers that are interested in a case-of-the-week narrative, but our genetic makeup is the complex, romantic relationship that occurs in and out of the courtroom, with kind of a love triangle," Hatosy says. "And then also the egregiously titillating union between my character, Detective McCandless, and Lee Anne Marcus (Georgina Haig), which occurs whenever and wherever they feel like getting naked and having sex."

Learning waitressing and parenting from 'Mom'

"MOM" RETURNS FOR ITS SECOND SEASON SEPT. 29 AT 8:30 P.M. / FILMMAGIC

TV parents. Anna Faris talks lessons learned on the set of her CBS sitcom.

The CBS sitcom "Mom" is almost a catalog of poor parenting: Alcoholism, drug abuse, teen pregnancy and money mismanagement are all key plot elements. It's the story of failed single mother Bonnie Plunkett (Allison Janney) trying to make it up to her waitress daughter Christy (Anna Faris).

We talked to star Anna Faris about her waitressing past and how the show is influencing her own parenting style.

Most of the acting world start out waitering, so do you have any experience of service?

Yes, I do. I was a waitress at a high-end retirement home in Seattle, Washington. There were usually different meal options: One was for the people who needed to watch their cholesterol, so like, steamed chicken. The second would be something thematic like fish and chips and the third would be, say, beef stroganoff. I was a terrible waitress. I would routinely — and I don't mind saying this now — go to work under the influence of the marijuana plant.

So you were quite chilled out?

Oh, I was the worst waitress. I would go back to the kitchen and I would just have scribbled nonsense orders. I'm a better waitress as Christy than I ever was as Anna.

Quoted

"I'm a better waitress as Christy than I ever was as Anna."

Faris, on her "Mom" character

Have you been reassessing your parenting style?

Oh, my God. Oh, man, I've definitely thought about a lot of parenting issues that hadn't occurred to me before.

Is it giving you the sweats?

Yes, teen pregnancy for sure. If there's birth control that I could secretly inject into my son until he's like, 34, I would.

Britney Spears gossip for your #TBT

Apparently there were Britney breakup rumors — and apparently they were premature, as the singer and boyfriend David Lucado are reportedly already thinking about expanding her family once she's done with her current Las Vegas residency, according to Radar Online. "Britney cannot wait until the Vegas show is done because she wants to start a family with David. She says she will get pregnant as soon as the show is finished," a source says. "David is always with her in Vegas and they act like an old married couple together. He is really good with her kids and has taken to the father role pretty easily."

1 Even Taylor Swift's haters are square

Thanks to court documents, we can finally put some names and faces to the three Connecticut residents charged with vandalizing Taylor Swift's Rhode Island vacation home, and the results are … kind of brainy. Michael Horrigan, 29, Tristan Kading, 28, and Emily Kading, 26, pleaded not guilty to charges they hurled beer bottles and shouted expletives at security guards monitoring Swift's property last month, according to TMZ. So what do they do when they're not drunkenly defacing property? Tristan Kading, for one, studied chemical oceanography at MIT and received the Richard Montgomery Award for Achievement in Mathematics. Younger sister Emily is studying to be a nuclear physicist, and both Tristan and Horrigan were given citations for heroism last year after rescuing a 12-year-old girl from a capsized canoe. Leave it to Swift to attract the nicest, smartest delinquents you could hope for. The defendants, by the way, say they "harbored no ill will toward Swift," who wasn't home at the time.

The people hounding Taylor Swift in this photo are not the same ones who hounded her at her vacation home.

2 Broderick and Parker go to Ireland to argue

You know what everyone loves on a vacation? "Intense discussions." Aren't they the best? And apparently that's what Matthew Broderick and Sarah Jessica Parker have been having while visiting Ireland. According to the National Enquirer, Broderick and Parker headed to their usual holiday spot on the Emerald Isle specifically to address their marriage woes and what we'll charitably refer to as his wandering eye. "They normally venture all around Donegal, but this time they spent the majority of their time locked away in their remote home out in the countryside," a source says. "One evening they went into Nancy's, a seafood restaurant, and hardly said a word to each other." That sounds so much like the opposite of fun. But hey, at least they're not stewing silently over dinner at home! There's that, at least.

DOING THIS IN IRELAND … OR MAYBE NOT.

3 Bieber to give another deposition

It's too bad Justin Bieber had such a terrible time during his last videotaped deposition in connection with his paparazzi assault case, because the Canadian pop star is going to have to do it all over again. A judge has ordered Bieber back for further interrogation due to his refusal to answer questions related to on-again, off-again girlfriend Selena Gomez, according to TMZ. Bieber will be questioned by the same lawyer who riled him so back in March, prompting the repeated response of "Don't ask me about her again" when questioned about Gomez. "He will have to answer questions he refused to answer last time," a source says. And the second go-round will be videotaped again, so we have that to look forward to.

Beauty. Get a sunless summer glow without any pesky white spots or orange streaks.

5 Steps to a perfect spray tan

Whether you're going glam for your big day or a special night out, or just want a glow for the beach, there are spray tan commandments you must follow. Break them and risk streaky hands or a stained once-white dress, warns Ashley Piotrowski, owner of The Bronzed Bee in Rittenhouse Square.

Piotrowski's clients, especially summer brides, come to her for meticulously applied airbrush spray tans, but all of her hard work will — literally — fade away if you don't stick to these rules.

RACHEL VIGODA
@rachelatmetro
rachel.vigoda@metro.us

Slather on the sunscreen and keep your tans sunless. / WAVEBREAK MEDIA

Follow these tips:

Go for a trial run first

"A bride can come in the night before her wedding and get an airbrush tan thinking it's going to be one thing — and it comes out another," Piotrowski says. She recommends spray tan newbies try it out about a month before a big event such as a wedding, bachelorette party or vacation to avoid horrific surprises.

48 hours to perfection

"Come in two days prior to your wedding and no sooner," Piotrowski cautions. You'll need to avoid water during the six to eight hours the tan is developing — which means no showering. "The day before is your rehearsal dinner, so you'll be running around sweating," she says. "You're going to want to shower that day."

Keep it light

Piotrowski says to "ask for a glow": "If you tell me you want to be super dark, like you just got back from Jamaica, I'll deliver — but you might not be happy with it." No matter how dark you go, the color is there for about a week; opting for a Tan Mom look won't make it last longer.

Amend your mistakes

Keep a small bottle of touch-up solution at home, such as Sun Labs' Self Tanning Micro Mist, for when you accidentally wash your hands before the color has set. If you absolutely must clean your hands, Piotrowski recommends using hand sanitizer on just your palms.

Powder, powder, powder

"I don't care if it's Christmastime, you're going to be sweating on your wedding day," Piotrowski says. Sweat can make a tan run or leave a telltale sign on a white dress. Keep moisture at bay, no matter what you're wearing, with liberal doses of baby powder.

Self-tanners to the rescue

If it seems like every sunny day is spent stuck in the office, fake a beach vacay with these trusty at-home tanners. METRO

No ketchup!

A judge spills all

We got a glimpse inside a hot dog–judging mind when we asked Marc Summers the tough questions — and got some opinionated answers.

What makes a winning hot dog?

"All beef is key in my opinion. And great beef."

What will you be looking at when judging?

"Overall, taste."

If there's one thing we should never, ever put on a hot dog, what would it be?

"Never ever, ever, ever put ketchup on a dog!"

Dog Days of Summer to decide winning wiener

On a bun. How are you celebrating National Hot Dog Month?

With all the barbecues, fireworks and ball games that go down this month, it's no wonder all 31 of July's days are dedicated to the all-American tubular meat. That's right, people, we're well into National Hot Dog Month. On Saturday, South Street Headhouse District and hot dog restaurant Hot Diggity! (630 South St.) celebrate the month of the wiener — and toppings, too — with the third annual Dog Days of Summer.

Double-dog dare

The amateurs

Home cooks will also get a chance to compete; this one is a battle of the toppings. The theme for accoutrements is simply "Philadelphia."

The winner will have his topping featured on the Hot Diggity! menu for a month. Full disclosure: This writer will be among the judges making a call on the best locally inspired toppings, braving scrapple, Whiz and Peanut Chews piled high. Marc Summers of Nickelodeon's "Double Dare" and the Food Network's "Upwrapped" will also be at the judges' table.

Highbrow hot dog

The pros

Dog Days is a showdown of the city's meanest weenies, with 20 restaurants including Alla Spina, Society Hill Society and Twisted Tail competing to create the most delicious frankfurter.

"Each year it keeps getting bigger and bigger," says Dog Days mastermind and Hot Diggity! owner Keith Garabedian. "It's fun to get other restaurants involved because you don't see hot dogs on a lot of menus. It's cool to have these amazing restaurants participate and see how that translates."

The key to a winner, advises Garabedian, is balance: "It needs to work as a complete sandwich. There needs to be a balance between bread and meat and toppings. Don't overpower the flavor."

Use your French press in a new way

Even a major restaurant chain with locations around the world appreciates a good kitchen hack. Hard Rock Cafe figured out that if you put booze and fruit in a French press and then press it table side, it both creates a refreshing summer cocktail and makes you look cool.

Pour yourself a glass and leave the rest in the press, so the drink becomes even juicier for the next round. RACHEL VIGODA

Hot chef.
Michael Hauke gets experimental at his Atlantic City spot.

Michael Hauke is the owner of Tony Boloney's, a pizza and sandwich shop with locations in Atlantic City (300 Oriental Ave.) and in Hoboken. In 2010, his Cheesesteak Ole won first place at Guy Fieri's Cheesesteak Battle. We're all hoping he'll open shop in Philadelphia one day soon, but in the meantime, our trips to AC this summer aren't complete without a Tony Boloney's slice.

How did Tony Boloney's get started?
We started five years ago, selling frozen crap to construction workers. I didn't like serving them such junk, so I shut everything down. My mantra now is: If I can buy [it], I can make it. If I can buy cheese, then I can make cheese. No more buying frozen fries, we'll make them from scratch.

How does a guy from Jersey beat Philly in a cheesesteak competition?
I shun the way that you're supposed to do things and instead do things the way that I want to. In this case that means a 10-spice sirloin.

Your menu has a fried chicken-and-waffles pizza and a tikka masala pizza. How do you come up with these combos?
I love Indian food, Korean food, traditional Jewish Passover food. I take all those ideas and ask myself, why can't I put that on a pizza or a sub?

Q&A

Were there any gross failures that stick out?
Not really. Sometimes we need to work through a few things. I have all my recipes worked out in my head first. But some just sound too weird to try. [The sandwich] Let My People Go was an example of one I almost didn't do because you've got apples, honey and cinnamon at the base. Then this brisket and tangy sauce? They don't make sense together, but when you have the finished product, it works.

This pie looks pretty tame compared to some of Hauke's creations at Tony Boloney's. / PROVIDED

'Street Trees'

Through Sept. 30
International House
3701 Chestnut St.
Free, 215-387-5125
www.ihousephilly.org
There's a psychedelic sci-fi vibe, a little reminiscent of the bulbous metallic visions of H.R Giger, in this multimedia exhibition from artist Ted Knighton, but these drawings, videos and installations are actually inspired by the everyday urban environment of Philadelphia. Filtered through Knighton's imagination, tree-lined streets and forgotten back alleys reveal the weird ghosts that haunt them — and not always peacefully.

Wayne Higby: 'Infinite Place'

Through Aug. 3
Philadelphia Art Alliance

www.philartalliance.org
This is a career retrospective of ceramic artist Wayne Higby, running from his raku-fired work in the '60s to his later large wall installations. Though one can see connections with land art and environmentalism in his work, the artist claims his focus is "the relationship between spirit and matter," suggesting a more metaphorical, psychological interpretation of his landscapes.

Neil DeGrasse Tyson may have had some gripes about the scientific inaccuracy of this 2013 outer space thriller — specifically its depiction of, uh, gravity — but while those details may be significant to the plot, they don't exactly ruin it. This also feels like a really good movie to watch under the stars, since you can look up and imagine it all happening.

Friday, times vary
Vox Populi, 319 N. 11th St.; $10, 800-838-3006; www.brownpapertickets.com
This piece by multidisciplinary artist Sebastian Cummings mixes electronic music, dance and theater to tell a sci-fi story of space aliens who land on Earth and meet not an "average" human but someone on the fringe, someone almost as much of an alien as them. There will be five performances between 3:30 and 11:30.

Berklee College of Music, has a slightly hippie vibe and some really pleasant tunes reminiscent of groups like The Format. The spot-on boy-girl harmonies between singer-songwriter Jon Cox and singer Ellen Shultz are a definite highlight of their sound, which is unusually polished for a year-old band — chalk it up to their education.

Use the laws we have

Re: 'No need to suffer gun violence' (Metro, July 16) Those people who naively think that gun violence can be legislated out of existence are living in a dream world. There are probably over 30,000 gun laws already on the books that impose restrictions on law-abiding individuals. If someone chooses to disobey the laws, no legislation is going to prevent that. When someone purchases a gun through a licensed dealer, he or she has to pass a background check and that firearm is registered to the buyer. Those who are barred from possessing guns legally will obtain them through other means. They will steal guns or buy them on the street. Even though there are laws against drunken driving, people still drive drunk.

CHUCK FAZIO, VIA EMAIL

Stop bombing

The sobering violence we are witnessing in Israel and Palestine is not a case of isolated or rare human rights violations, but the intensification of the daily enforcement of the Israeli occupation. Prime Minister Netanyahu's repeated calls for vengeance in the form of collective punishment of Palestinian civilians including mass arrests, killings and even missile drops on Gaza should trouble any person who believes in due process and the law. Terrorizing an innocent population will not bring justice.

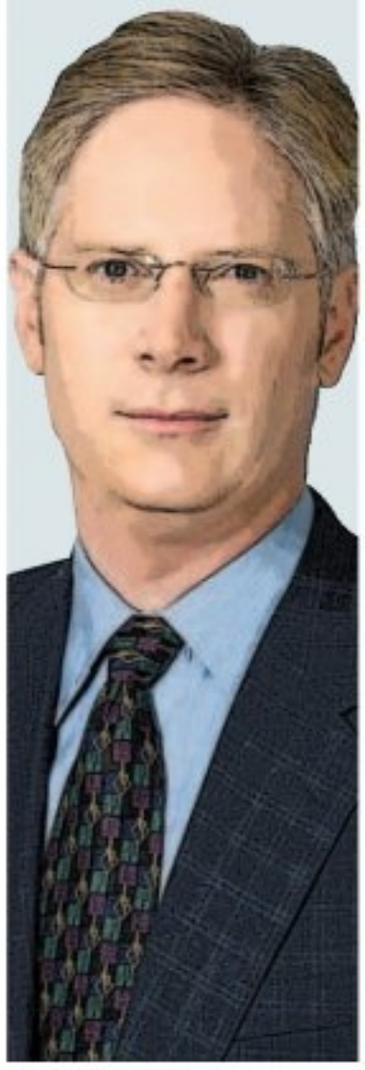
TOM FOREMAN
POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT FOR CNN



CNN=POLITICS

If there is one thing that can turn Republicans into whirling furies these days, it is the Supreme Court. The mere notion of another ruling from those do-gooder, elitist activists is enough to send GOPers spinning down the mall like so many Tasmanian Devils. Oh, wait. I mean the Democrats. That's who is enraged at the Supreme Court now. The Republicans had their turn last year.

It's hard to keep track, because as much as both sides praise the court and say they respect it one moment, the very next they are ordering SCOTUS piñatas for their summer soirees. It all depends on which way the legal wind is blowing.

Gallup released a new poll this week showing that ever since the Hobby Lobby ruling propped up conservative notions about bosses, contraception and who foots the bill, Republicans have been feeling considerably better about the court.

Their approval for the black-robed gang has risen 21 points since last September to just over 51 percent now.

Democrats? Not so much. Oh, sure, they loved the court after the favorable Obamacare ruling in 2012. Back then, 68 percent of Dems approved. But this year, the court has wailed on the Obama White House, time and again spiking its policies. Now just 44 percent of Dems approve. Grumble, grumble.

Self-proclaimed Independents seem to be the only voters out there who don't allow individual rulings to shape their views on the court. Their approval stands pretty firmly at 46 percent.

I tend to think this is all a bad sign. Sure, political parties can be expected to oppose each other vigorously, just like all those soccer teams did at the World Cup.

But blaming the referees for a loss, absent indisputable evidence of malfeasance, is the refuge of cowards and scoundrels.

Certainly, the Supreme Court makes mistakes, just as we all do. But those mistakes can really be determined only in the context of history.

On a day-to-day basis, court-bashing by either party undermines even further the shaky trust Americans are putting in their whole political system.

Cancer | June 21-July 22. Hold on to your assets and avoid lending money or possessions. Be firm with friends or relatives who make unreasonable requests or demands.

Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. This is not a good time to lock yourself into a long-term agreement. Find out all the details before you make a promise that you may not want to honor.

Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22. To keep harmony in your business or personal relationships, you must be willing to compromise. Treat others' beliefs with respect and listen attentively to people's concerns.

Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. Don't take chances with health, money or family matters. You have to spend your time wisely to avoid burning out. Only take on what you can handle.

Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21. It may seem as though everything you desire is right in front of you. Set a limit before you buy something unnecessary. Luxury items may tempt you, but the novelty will wear off.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. You will face opposition if you make unwanted changes at home. Consider what others want, and find a way to satisfy everyone.

Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20. Show your friends and family how much you appreciate them. Plan a get-together, or offer to do something that you know will make life easier for those you love.

Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18. Do whatever it takes to make a move that will put you into a higher earning bracket. A successful interview can pave the way to a better position.

Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. You will confuse someone with your mixed emotional signals. Listen to this person's concerns, and make your feelings and plans perfectly clear.

Aries | March 21-April 20. Consider making changes at home that will make your life easier or your surroundings more comfortable. You don't have to spend a lot of money to make your place look more inviting.

Taurus | April 21-May 21. Consider trying out for a leadership position. You'll be recognized as a person who can help those in need, and you will be rewarded for your efforts.

Gemini | May 22-June 20. Don't let anyone push you around. If you don't speak up now, you are likely to end up in a compromising position on a continuing basis.

Stephenson leaves

Another star signs with new team

The NBA free agent list continues to get shorter and shorter, as Lance Stephenson became the latest star to make his official decision Wednesday. Stephenson bolted from the Pacers and signed a 3-year, $27 million deal with the Hornets after posting a career season in Indiana last year.

5 Things Phillies must do in the second half

MLB. The Phillies need to improve after a mundane first half.

The Phillies as we know them could change forever in the next few weeks.

Though many of the fan favorites appear to be staying put, if the Phillies keep losing there is no telling who could be traded.

There's a chance the team stays how it is, floating just below .500 and put off rebuilding for yet another year.

But with just under half a season of games remaining in the MLB season, the Phillies need to make some moves and change their approach.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

Visit Metro.us to see where the Phillies are in the Power Rankings.

1 Trade away Byrd, Papelbon

Veterans Jonathan Papelbon and Marlon Byrd are playing a lot better than many expected they would at the start of the season, and they each have contracts the Phillies would like to dump (even if they have to eat a little bit of them to make a move).

The Phillies have an up-and-coming closer in Ken Giles, and with the Phillies out of contention for a playoff spot, why not give the young hurler a taste of the action in the ninth inning of a major league game?

As for the outfield, the Phils have a cheap option in Grady Sizemore as well as Domonic Brown and Ben Revere. Byrd's power would certainly be missed, but he could bring back a good prospect or two in return.

Marlon Byrd leads the Phillies in most power categories this season, including home runs. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

2 Utilize the running game

The Phillies offense could have three extremely fast players in its everyday lineup in Revere, Sizemore and Jimmy Rollins (who is expected to stay with the team through the deadline). Mix in a few guys who run decently well, like Chase Utley and Cody Asche and there is no reason the Phillies, who struggle to hit with men on base anyway, can't run rampant on defenses.

Rollins has 19 stolen bases this season, second most on the squad.

The Phillies should try and take a bag every time a speedy player reaches first base, and the big hitters, Utley and Ryan Howard, can simply hit them over and get them in with a sac fly or well-placed ground out.

Call up Franco, move Asche

ASCHE HAS HIS AVERAGE UP TO .254 AFTER RETURNING FROM AN INJURY.

Trading Byrd could thin out the Phillies' outfield reserves. But not if they move Asche — whose offense has picked up lately but whose defense continues to struggle at third base — to a corner outfield spot.

This would open things up for the Phillies' third baseman of the future, the hot-hitting and quick-gloved Maikel Franco.

The influx of youth and improvement on defense would help fill the void for a departure of power (Byrd).

It is important that the Phillies are able to give Franco everyday at-bats when he is called up.

Hire new management

It is finally safe to say it — the Ruben Amaro experiment didn't work. Since taking over the defending World Champions as GM in 2009, the Phillies regressed every single season while spending more and more on payroll and completely depleting their farm system.

Amaro was handed a World Series-winning squad and has failed to improve the team every single season.

The Phillies need a new GM, one who is cognitive of the changing baseball environment, one who emphasizes the importance of homegrown players and one who is willing to do everything it takes to rebuild the Phillies into a contender again.

After all, it wasn't mercenaries who carried the Phillies to their first World Title in 25 years back in 2008. It was homegrown talent.

AMARO'S CAREER AS PHILLIES GM COULD COME TO AN END BEFORE THE SEASON ENDS.

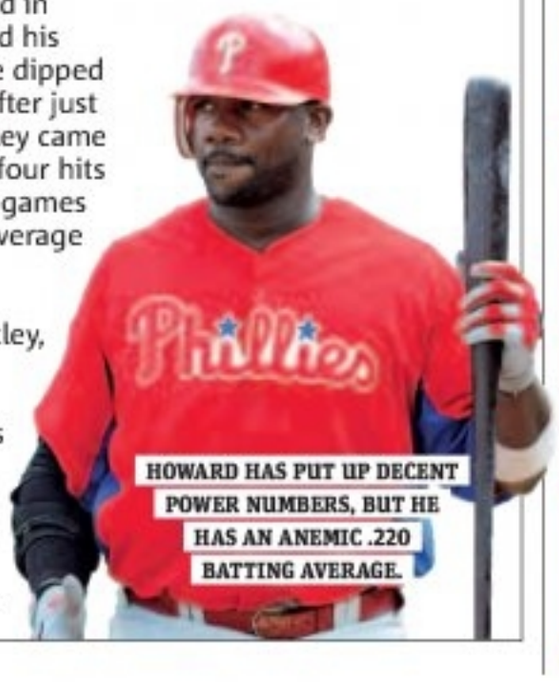
Rest the veterans

Utley got into a slump a few weeks ago, and it had a very easy fix. He hadn't rested in a long time, and his batting average dipped considerably. After just one day off, Utley came back to collect four hits in his next two games and bring his average back up.

With aging sluggers like Utley, Ryan Howard, and even Rollins, the Phillies need to mix in some backups, give them at-bats and keep their core three from surpassing 130 games started this season.



HOWARD HAS PUT UP DECENT POWER NUMBERS, BUT HE HAS AN ANEMIC .220 BATTING AVERAGE.

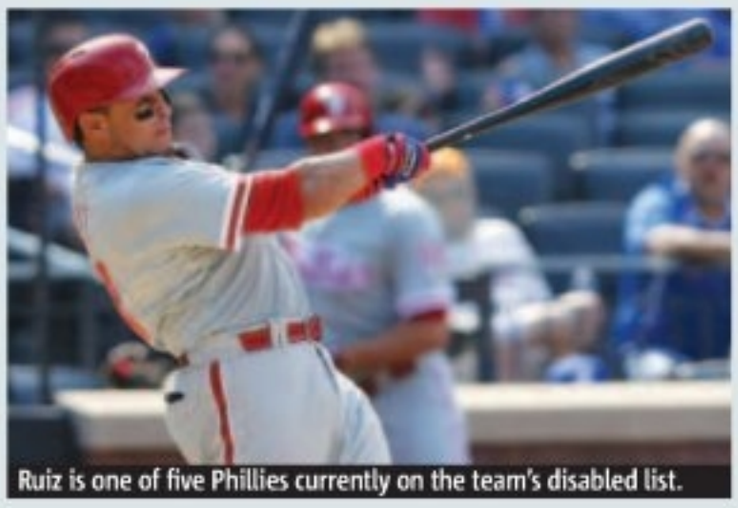
Return of Chooch

Ruiz to begin rehab this week

The Phillies are creeping closer to full strength.

With Cliff Lee slated to join the Phillies this weekend when they face Atlanta, his battery mate Carlos Ruiz will play in his first rehab game down in Clearwater on Thursday.

The catcher has not played baseball since June 26, when he was hit in the head by a pitch and was later diagnosed with a concussion.



Ruiz is one of five Phillies currently on the team's disabled list.

Reid Brignac, a utility infielder for the Phillies, is also expected to continue his rehab in the Gulf Coast League alongside Ruiz.

The Phillies have not announced when either is expected to be prepared to play in Philadelphia again. METRO

Sixers rookie McRae turning heads in Vegas

NBA. Second-rounder Jordan McRae is showing off his offensive skills in the Summer League.

Jordan McRae / GETTY IMAGES

The Sixers didn't draft Tennessee's Jordan McRae, but they traded for his rights on draft night from the Spurs.

Maybe the Sixers were on to something.

The 6-foot-6 guard has been an offensive powerhouse thus far in Orlando and Las Vegas, most recently posting 21 points in Tuesday's game against the Suns.

Through three games he is averaging over 19 points per game.

McRae was lights out from the field, making 7 of 11 and going 3 for 4 from three-point range. Though they are only Summer League games, many NBA players are able to crack a roster spot and make a living by earning their way onto a team (like Temple alum Dionte Christmas, who did it with the Suns last summer).

But the guard could be joining a list of Sixers he doesn't want to — the injured reserve.

With just 2:25 to play, McRae went down under the Phoenix basket and was helped off with a left ankle sprain.

He will sit out the next few for the 76ers, but a full diagnosis is not yet known.

FANTASY QBs TO WAIT ON

If position requirements didn't exist in fantasy football, we'd gobble up all the quarterbacks we could and laugh all the way to the bank.

But they do, and most leagues require we start only one quarterback. Given that they're the most consistent statistical producers, the most healthy and have the most positional depth in today's pass-happy NFL, it's a no-brainer to stock up on running backs and wide-outs while waiting on your quarterback. Of course, this only works if the QBs we're waiting for produce at a top-12 clip. Here are the signal callers the "Wait on QB" purists should be targeting this year.

Cutler will be in his second year under offensive guru head coach Marc Trestman. / GETTY IMAGES

FANTASY

ADAM LEVITAN, LIVING THE FANTASY

Cut me, Jay

Last season, Bears quarterbacks totaled 4,450 passing yards, 32 touchdowns and 19 interceptions — numbers good enough for a QB5 fantasy ranking. Credit passing-game savant Marc Trestman, whose scheme was so dominant journeyman Josh McCown became a stud. Now it's Jay Cutler's turn to go off, as his superior arm talent is a perfect fit for the basketball-on-grass receiving trio of Brandon Marshall, Alshon Jeffery and Martellus Bennett. Cutler's Yahoo! average draft position (ADP) is currently 104.9, the 15th quarterback off the board. It's robbery.

Iceman cometh

Matt Ryan has thrown for at least 4,000 yards and 26 touchdowns in three straight seasons, yet he can be had in the seventh round of fantasy drafts. It's a reminder of the mind-boggling depth at the position. Ryan has a chance at his best year yet, thanks largely to the healthy return of Julio Jones and Roddy White, and a running game that remains inept.
